Dog Days of Birmingham --- Temperament Test

Temperament Test Explained: A temperament test is a series of planned exercises designed to assess the new dogs potential for aggressive behavior while determining the current level of social development to ensure that it is not aggressive and can play well with others, without posing a danger to itself or others.

Temperament Test Clients: Interview Clients should arrive on the day of their temperament test with all the applications and waivers complete and an up to date record on vaccinations. After arriving, a daycare representative will sit down with you and your dog and discuss the information that you have provided in the application package. Immediately following this discussion, you will be asked to leave or wait for a short period of time while the actual test is performed.

The temperament test process: Our daycare has a small group of "facility dogs" that are well known and their behavior is consistent and that we trust. We have experience with these dogs and we can control them at the drop of a hat. These dogs are best friends of the facility and some are owned by the owners of our daycare. We will place your dog in a secure area, a temperament testing area that is ideally designed for this process. While keeping your dog on a leash, we will allow the dog to meet and greet each human member of our staff that works at the facility. The greetings will be observed for fearful or aggressive behaviors toward the staff. Once this is complete, we will bring in the first facility dog on a leash. The first dog will be a very mild mannered dog and the meeting process will be observed for threatening body language, or posturing, and if no negative behavior presents itself then we will unleash the new dog while remaining very close in case problems arise. If all goes well we will then introduce a toy into the environment and initiate play and observe for possessive/aggressive tendencies. This will be monitored for about 10 minutes. If all goes well we will then bring in another stock dog and start the entire process over observing the new dog for any stress brought on by the new facility dog. Once we have introduced the facility dogs to the new dog's test and observed each for 10 minutes we should begin to see play behavior, or even casual disinterest by the new dog after he/she becomes accustomed to the play pack we have created.

If all of the previous testing has gone well it is now time to introduce the new dog to the main pack, which is a fairly simple process and one that does not need a lot of fanfare. The new dog, while on leash, will be walked into the main pack. This will happen while the main pack is under complete control. There will be lots of sniffing, tail wagging, and some posturing from some of the senior members of the pack and this is totally normal and to be expected. If any members of the pack begin to seem a little pushy, the handler will insure to the pack that the new dog is "with you" and that you control the situation. After 5 to 10 minutes the newness will wear off and the pack will return to it's normal activities and the new dog will become more of "just another dog". This is now the proper time to release the new dog from the leash and allow them to venture out a bit on their own. The new dog will likely join the group and introduce themselves. The handler will remain as a shadow observing the process up close. A few of the more senior members may not like the excitement of the new dog and react a little negatively. This also is to be expected and they are just telling the new dog to calm down.

Again, after 5 to 10 minutes this should subside also.

If this is how the entire process happened, then congratulations. Your beloved dog is now being accepted into daycare and has found their new pack or friends.

I hereby accept those risks, for myself and for my dog and agree that Dog Days of Birmingham shall not be held responsible for any injuries suffered by myself or my dog as a result of any such incidents at Dog Days of Birmingham.
